OBIETTIVI FORMATIVI

The course is explicitly designed to encourage the development of higher-level abilities: to think critically, communicate effectively, and develop a clear line of argument supported by literary and critical texts.

Aims

- Develop the students' ability to read primary texts critically.
- Develop the students' intellectual independence and try to free them from dogmatic acceptance of authoritative critical interpretations.
 - Foster students' ability to identify and question assumptions in the relevant secondary literature.
 - Encourage students to relate texts to historical and cultural contexts.
- Promote students' familiarity with the process of researching and writing a paper and acquisition of related skills.
 - Encourage and facilitate students' ability to locate, access, and use online resources in the field and use electronic tools to communicate.

Objectives

1. Demonstrate appreciation and understanding of literary texts in the reading list.
2. Explain how these works belong to, or are influenced by, the literary movements of Realism and Naturalism or Modernism.
3. Demonstrate knowledge of the historical context which led to the growth of the the literary movemnets of Realism and Modernism.
4. Relate major cultural ideas of the time, such as Social Darwinism and Eugenics, to the texts.
5. Interpret texts in terms of three specific theoretical concepts: ethnicity, identity, and race.
6. Independently research (using the library or the web resources identified in class), identify, and negotiate with the tutor a topic or text for the final written assignment, showing the ability to choose and apply appropriate critical perspectives.
7. Show correct understanding of and apply the conventions of academic essay writing in the discipline.

PROGRAMMA DIDATTICO

The course is a survey of American literature, beginning around 1865 with the Realistic and Naturalistic Periods, continuing through the Modern Period. Students will study the poetry and prose, including fiction and non-fiction, of both major and minor literary figures of the periods. The course emphasizes the cultural and historical conditions in America, including discussions of race and gender, and explores definitions of major literary movements. The student will explore the currents of thought, which produced cultural and historical changes, and appreciate the artistic modes through which opinion was molded, swayed, and reflected. The student will understand and identify the major characteristics of the literary periods in American literature and will analyze and describe, both orally and in written form, the work of specific authors from all periods.
