Educational objectives

The CdS aims at providing advanced knowledge in the analysis of international, multi-level and global processes and policies, as well as essential specialized language skills to communicate in qualified international work contexts, further than those of access equal to at least B2 of the English language.

Within this common core, specific training objectives are identified with respect to the curriculum chosen by the student.

With reference to the curriculum called "international studies", the educational objectives are:

- understanding of complex decision-making processes
- acquisition of the ability to identify and select relevant sources and data for the analysis of global political, legal and economic processes
- acquisition of the skills for analysing data of global political, legal and economic processes
- acquisition of command of at least two foreign languages in written and oral form

With reference to the second curriculum, "international trade", the specific educational objectives are:

- acquisition of economic-legal instruments relating to international exchanges
- acquisition of advanced knowledge in the evaluation, planning and implementation of foreign direct investments;
- ability to analyse political and security risks related to investments and international commercial transactions

To achieve the above indicated educational objectives, during the first year, students will acquire the knowledge of a historical, political, economic and legal nature constituting the conceptual framework necessary to understand and analyse the global context, its evolutions and dynamics.

During the second year, with reference to the "international studies" curriculum, students will deepen the skills acquired in the first year focusing on the protection of human rights and on the regulatory strategies adopted by public administrations to face global challenges. In addition, further language skills will be acquired at the student's choice.

With reference to the curriculum of "international trade", it aims at strengthening the corporate and legal technical skills (focused on the themes of international taxation and international commercial law), as well as a training period with private and public subjects directly involved in the processes of economic globalization

The training course culminates in the elaboration and discussion of an original written thesis carried out under the guidance of a lecturer among the professors of the Degree course, possibly accompanied by an external co-rapporteur from the realities in which the student carried out the training internship.
