EDUCATIONAL OBJECTIVES	Over the past few decades, several social factors have determined the acquisition and use of the Italian language by a number always greater number of users, so that the Italianization process of our country can today it is said to be almost completely accomplished. The "mass" knowledge and use of the Italian language has meant that this gradually acquired "new structures" and new functions and areas of employment, passing from a language exclusively used in writing and on official occasions a language spoken by all Italians on all occasions. Its impact on reality led to the formation of a series of varieties that make up the repertoire of Italians whose structures and use depend on variability diatopic (connected to geographical space), diastratic (connected to classes social), diaphasic (connected to communicative situations) and diamesic (connected to the means of communication). On the other hand, the recent "clearance" of the dialect has resulted in several dialectal "resurgences" with new uses of the local code (especially by the young people) especially in relation to new means of communication (Websites, Apple Devices, Web Chat, SMS, Song, etc.). The course, entitled "CONTEMPORARY ITALIAN. STRUCTURES E VARIATION will tend to offer a picture of the current structure of Italian.
TEACHING METHODS	Lectures and exercises.
